HARRY LAUDER WANTS TO GO TO PARLIAMENT

Popular Comedian Announces Intention of Being Candidate at Next Election.

BY LA MARQUE DE FONSECAY.
HARRY LAUDER, whose son has just graduated at Cambridge University, and who has become, thanks to the large sums of money which he has earned on this side of the Atlantic, a large landowner and a lord in Scotland, has developed his intention of standing for Parliament at the next general election, or earlier, if any suitable vacancy occurs in the House of Commons.

In this he is following the example of several of the well-known Parisian comedians, who offered himself a few years ago as a candidate for the French Chamber of Deputies. He made the mistake of standing for a provincial constituency, where he was relatively unknown, instead of seeking the votes of one of the divisions of the metropolis, where he is a popular favorite.

Harry Lauder, however, is certain to win the battle, what constituency he stands for. For his voice extends throughout the kingdom, and people will flock to his campaign speeches as they would to his performances. For, as when he is in the sets out to be funny, he is ten times more so in his sober earnest. No candidate opposing him would have the ghost of a show.

Once he has taken his seat in the House of Commons, parliamentarian life will undergo a distinct change for the better, and the atmosphere of indifference by which it is now pervaded will be dispelled. Gloom will disappear when Harry Lauder, as member, says, for Edinburgh, proceeds to urge, in his own characteristic fashion, the claims of "the girl in the post-office at Killarney" to higher wages; and what Speaker possessed of sane sense of humor and a love of laughter, such as, for instance, William Lowther, would refrain from according every opportunity to the inevitable Harry to "watch his eye" for the sake of a Lauder performance then and there.

Of course, if Harry Lauder makes a name for himself in Parliament, there is no reason why other music-hall and vaudeville artists should not aspire to legislative honors, and George Crossmitch, for instance, would be a distinct acquisition to the House of Commons. His "Viper-and-a-half" after some heavy, dreary speech by the stupid Secretary of the Home Department, who seems so utterly incapable of handling the suffragette situation, would freshen up jaded members, and make them turn to business with renewed zest. The prospect is so fascinating that one may look for the adoption of some kind of the kind on this side of the ocean.

Almost every calling has been represented in Old World parliaments, including prize fighters, such as the father of the late Speaker, Gully, who was elected a member of the House of Commons. His "Viper-and-a-half" after some heavy, dreary speech by the stupid Secretary of the Home Department, who seems so utterly incapable of handling the suffragette situation, would freshen up jaded members, and make them turn to business with renewed zest.

The recent marriage of Jean Gerard, of Paris, with Henriette Pocho, the divorced wife of the Comte de Marce, and their arrival in the United States, have recalled the somewhat sensational scandal in which they were involved last fall.

Among the admirers of the ex-countess, who is a very handsome woman of some thirty-six to thirty-eight years of age, is the young Comte de Bort. He became blindly infatuated with her, and, with a view of proving his affection, insured his life in her favor in the great Parisian life insurance concern, La France, for a sum of 800,000 francs. The policy bore the date of March 18, 1911. The lady had promised to marry the young count as soon as her divorce from the Comte de Marce was complete, and the wedding was to have taken place last December.

In the early part of November, de Bort undertook a motor tour in the Pyrenees, with a friend, Jean Gerard, whose acquaintance he had made through the ex-countess. On reaching the most dangerous part of the road, de Bort, who was driving, stopped to see what was the matter, leaving De Bort on the seat. Suddenly, the car, which had stopped, unduly started on again, and before de Bort could seize the steering gear, it had precipitated itself over the precipice, carrying him with it to his death. Gerard, however, saved himself from being bowled over by jumping aside.

That is his story. For there were no witnesses of the tragedy. A fortnight later the ex-countess applied to the La France insurance company of Paris for the amount of the policy in her favor. The company demurred, pending an investigation, and then declined to pay, on the ground that it stipulated in its policies that if the insured person loses his life, the company shall not be bound to pay, unless the death is caused by an accident, and the company asserted that Jean Gerard was responsible for young de Bort's death, and produced evidence to show that he was not.

The court, however, decided that although the evidence of the relations between the woman and Gerard was conflicting, there was no evidence of the responsibility of the latter for the death of de Bort, and that, consequently, the company must pay the amount of the policy to the lady, who has now become Mme. Jean Gerard. It is presumably because the count had found themselves subjected to a good deal of odium in France that they have come to America, and may perhaps settle here.

Young de Bort was the son of the late Senator Teissere "Vicente" de Bort, and a grandson of that Cabinet Minister Teissere who was for a few years, French ambassador at London. The old fellow had no title whatsoever, and no social savoir grace. His socialisms and those of his wife, while he was Minister of Commerce in Paris, during the great international exhibition of 1878, and afterwards, in the French republic, were of the most extraordinary and entertaining character.

When he was sent to Vienna, he caused his son Edmond to be appointed as secretary to his mission. While there, Edmond became so impressed with the aristocratic nature of his environment that he coolly assumed the title of Viconte Teissere de Bort, Bort being the name of the large villa where the count's family had their town residence. It naturally followed that Edmond's son, in turn, styled himself the Comte de Bort, dropping altogether his somewhat plebeian patronymic of Teissere.

Basile Zaharoff, a multi-millionaire Greek, who makes his home in Paris, has just given an evidence of patriotism which may be commended to the citizens of the United States. For he has lately purchased in London, Berlin, St. Petersburg, Vienna, Rome and Madrid, in Constantinople, Bucharest, Belgrade, Sofia and Cetinje, as well as in the French metropolis, a state mansion, and has presented them to the Helene crown, for use as the legations of Greece abroad.

He received his education in England, at Rugby and at Trinity College, Cambridge, talks English, and, without the slightest trace of an accent, is renowned as one of the most skillful fencers in Paris, and owns there the daily illustrated newspaper, the Extra, a paper that has an enormous circulation of about 100,000 copies. He paid attention two or three years ago in connection with the successful effort of one of its representatives to make a trip around the world in record time.

Greece has no more powerful or energetic champions of her best interests abroad than Basile Zaharoff, and his two sisters, who live with him at his great house in the Avenue Hoche, in Paris, where he has recently increased the good will in which he is held by a gift of $500,000 to the cause of aviation in France.

Captain Quinby requested the Navy Department to name the court for the purpose of making the investigation.

The two cases remaining on the docket are Salem Loan & Trust Co. vs. Kelley and Lynch vs. O'Brien, which will be argued to-morrow.

Hinton—Armstrong. [Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Fredericksburg, Va., June 17.—R. L. Hinton, of Manassas, and Miss Mirza R. Armstrong, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Armstrong, of this city, were married to-day at the residence of the bride's parents, Adam and Mary Williams, D. D., performing the ceremony. The couple will make their home at Manassas.

TYPHOID OUTLOOK NOT PROMISING

Carelessness Has Already Brought On Serious Conditions in Some Sections.

Serious conditions from the rapid spread of typhoid fever in several sections of the State have been reported to the State Board of Health, due, it is believed, to gross neglect in proper care for the first cases that appeared.

Assistant Health Commissioner Allen W. Freeman has returned from a brief visit to some of the counties in which typhoid is prevalent. Unless more rigid local precautions are taken and more attention is paid to frequent warnings, the summer will prove a disastrous one in its typhoid record, according to Dr. Freeman. The warm open winter did not kill off the flies, and a colder season would have done, and the opportunities for the spread of typhoid, unless proper precautions are taken, are excellent. As a result of Dr. Freeman's inspection tour, the State Board of Health has issued a special bulletin, calling attention to the proper method of caring for individual cases of typhoid. Twenty thousand small placards with bedside directions for the care of typhoid patients are being distributed to physicians, telling how the patient is to be cared for, how disinfectants are to be prepared, and what must be done to prevent carrying the disease from the sick to the well. Carelessness means the infection of other members of the household, while preventive measures will generally suffice to confine the disease to the first case.

SUFFER LOSS BY FIRE.
Subscription Started for Relief of Those Whose Efforts are Burned.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Charlottesville, Va., June 17.—Fire, which broke out shortly after midnight on Belmont, entirely destroyed a combined store and dwelling and badly damaged another house. The two buildings were owned by T. W. Nevel, who carried no insurance on them. His loss is between $3,000 and $3,500. The store was managed by B. Johnson for Henry Burford, and besides the family of Mr. Johnson, Sterling Baltimore and a Mrs. Mitchell each had rooms in the building. All three of these occupants lost everything in the fire. The only insurance was that of $700 on the stock. The families of David Thomas and of Mrs. Beards, who lived in the house, which was partially burned, lost considerable furniture. A popular subscription has been started for the relief of the sufferers from the fire.
